

A MYSTERIOUS ORE BODY.

Which No One is Allowed to Look At.

The market now hinges on the ore body in Con. Virginia and that vicinity. The managers say that the bonanza is there, rich and extensive, but they will not allow any one to make a personal inspection of the property. There are scores of men in Virginia city with large bank accounts, who, if they could feel assured that the ore body was there, would back it in the market with their last dollar. They are, however, expected to purchase the pig without seeing it, which they naturally, as business men, decline to do.

If the assertions of the management are true, the stock is easily worth $100 a share. The air of mystery, however, is deadening the market, as the time has long since passed where men of business sense and burned fingers will invest in ore bodies which they cannot be allowed the privilege of looking at.

If the middle mines were thrown open and proved to be all right, the market would jump like a quarter horse.

A Question of Privilege.

In the Arkansas Legislature. Morning of the second day. Member from Persimmon county.—"Mr. Speaker: I arise, sir, to a question of privilege, I reckon, I don't know much about the inside workin's of a Legislature, and if I'm makin' a mistake in this step I hope you will excuse me. I left home in a hurry, and didn't have time to change my clothes, and in fact I didn't have no clothes to change. It makes a proud man feel sorter bad to be in a town without bein' sorter dressed up, and I move you, sir, that I be allowed the six dollars for yesterday's service that I may sorter rig myself up. Down the street a piece I saw a suit of clothes marked five dollars and a half. If I git my six dollars I can pay for the suit of clothes, and, when I ain't got nothin' particular to do, git on a pleasant jamboree with the extra fifty cents. The people of this here town have accused the country members of this body of bein' close, and the reason I want to git on the jamboree is to show them there ain't nothin' close about me. Just before leavin' home my wife said to me—'an' them that know her will 'low that Sue is a monstrous sensible woman ef she ain't none too good lookin'—'Jim, when you git down thar don't be small. Slesh round an' show the fokes down thar that the people of this here community ain't all slouches. Pay for yer share of everything, even if it costs twenty-five cents. Don't let yer colleague, Buckshot Fagleson, fly higher than you do.' I shall carry out that advise, sir, and don't you fail to catch an occasional glimpse of that fact."

Bernhardt's Love Making.
The Bulletin, usually a cautious, conservative sheet thus describes Sarah Bernhardt's love making:
She makes love with more intensity than any other woman on the stage. Her voice has a coaxing quality, which is irresistible; she writhes around her lover like a snake and wraps him in exquisite folds, from which, a man would need a heart of stone to seek escape. Her eye is moist with the fervor of love, her hands tremble, her pose varies from the surrender of affection to the fierce tiger-like spring of passion.

When the warm weather is over John Piper expects to have her up here.

—Notwithstanding the Interstate Commerce law and other circumstances supposed to be sufficient to prevent not only discriminations, but insure passably uniform rates, the scalpers in San Francisco continue to do business in several offices. How they do this is better understood by railroad men than by the uninitiated public.

—A Reno girl asked a young gentleman to treat her to ice cream and he managed to evade the responsibility. Next evening she poured some hot water down between his spine and his shirt collar in order to get even.

—Stocks still puzzle the purchasers.

The Road to Ruin.
A Denver editor wrote: "The employment of ten thousands of females in business pursuits will in time ruin us as a business nation." Then he went home, threw himself on a lounge and smoked a cigar, while his wife spaded up ten square yards of flower garden.—Norristown Herald.
